Federal Supplemental Security Income: Questions & Answers

A - An elderly aunt of mine has very little income, and I think she may qualify for SSI. What are the eligibility requirements?

A - To be eligible for SSI, a person must be 65 or older, or blind, or disabled, and have limited income and resources. An individual may be eligible with countable income of less than $208.20 a month; a couple, with less than $312.30. An individual can have resources of up To $1,500; a couple, up to $2,250. Not all income nor all resources are counted in determining eligibility. Also, applicants must be U.S. residents and either U.S. citizens or lawfully admitted immigrants. For more information contact any social security office.

Q - My mother lives with me because she can't afford to live alone. My husband and I give her free room and board and help to support her. Would this affect her eligibility for SSI payments?

A - If an eligible person is living in another person's household and receiving support and maintenance in kind from that person, the basic SSI amount is reduced by one-third. This reduction takes the place of counting the dollar value of the support and maintenance as income.

Q - My husband and I get SSI payments. Last month, he took a part-time job. Are we supposed to report his salary to social security?

A - Yes. You should notify social security promptly of any change in your income. Your right to SSI checks, or the amount of your checks, may be affected by changes in the amount of your other income. Even though SSI payments are made on a monthly basis, income for SSI purposes is figured on a quarterly basis. This means that a change in your income in any month of a 3-month calendar quarter can affect the payments due for each month.

Q - My older sister has very poor vision. In fact, she's almost blind. Since she has no assets or income of her own, I thought she might qualify for SSI. Is she eligible?

A - Under SSI, a person whose vision is no better than 20/200 even with glasses, or who has a limited visual field of 20 degrees or less, is considered blind. If a person's visual impairment is not severe enough to meet the definition of blindness, he or she might qualify as a disabled person. For more information, call any social security office.
